Webinar on Aquatic Animal Health

ICAR-Central Institute of Fisheries Education, Mumbai

Date: 24th November, 2020 Time: 9.00 AM to 2.00 PM

Aquaculture has been recognized as the fastest-growing food-animal production sector in the world and it accounts for 46 percent of the global fish production and 52 percent of fish for human consumption. Further, aquaculture is projected to continue as the driving force behind the growth in global fish production. However, aquatic animal diseases have been causing significant losses in aquaculture production world over leading to huge economic losses in many countries and regions. Therefore, aquatic animal diseases are considered as one of the most serious impediments to sustainable production. Rapid expansion and intensification of aquaculture along with the transboundary movement of aquatic animals for aquaculture purposes as well as for trade are some of the major factors which contribute to the rapid spread of diseases. Nevertheless, research and development in the area of aquatic animal health management have been contributing significantly to the development of management strategies to combat various diseaes. However, as disease expression in aquaculture is complex, it is increasingly being realized that a holistic approach encompassing host, pathogen and environment is key to effective management of aquatic animal health. Against this background, Aquatic Environment & Health Management Division of ICAR-Central Institute of Fisheries Education under the aegis of National Agricultural Higher Education Project (NAHEP) envisages to organize a webinar to discuss some of the issues/challenges in aquatic animal health by involving scientists/researchers/industry representatives from India and overseas. The objective of the webinar is to disseminate latest knowledge in the area of aquatic animal health to students, researchers, teachers and industry participants.
